U.S. 561 (1915) ANCHOR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION v. HYSLOP, ASHBY AND COMPANY. No. 218. Supreme Court of United States. Submitted March 2, 1915. Decided April 6, 1915. APPEAL FROM THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT. Mr. Max B. Millikan and Mr. Francis R. Brown for appellant. Mr. Robert T. Scott for appellees. *563 MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the court. This is an action to recover damages for the loss of a man's life and his injuries. The accident happened on December 5, 1908, on the deck of a steamship in the waters of Puget Sound. The ship was in the charge of Captain Heidie who was acting as pilot. The ship struck the American Bank wharf, which has a dock on one side and a waterway on the other. There were planks or gangways in the usual course of dock operations between the waterway and the wharf. The gangway was about twelve feet wide and four feet high and the light was on it when the ship was opposite. In consequence of the pressure of the ship upon the dock the gangway slipped down until the plaintiff, an employee of the plaintiff, a subcontractor of the Bank, was under it. He was killed. The jury, who tried the case, found for the defendant. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the vessel was at fault, as there was no other reason why the accident happened, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to a new trial. The plaintiff takes this as a reversal. The defendant relies upon the rule that in a case like the present there may be found a presumption that the negligence of the steamship was a cause of the accident, since it is a rule of common sense that she was charged with knowledge that it was the purpose of the Bank to get the ship under way and that she had no right to obstruct the way. But the presumption is rebuttable and this court has held that the vessel could rebut it by showing the presumption to be contrary to all the facts. McPherson v. Steamship Tweed,

The present invention relates to an improvement in digital video signal recording or reproducing system which does not require to use any color processing circuit or any signal processing circuit. The recent television broadcasting has started to use the digital signal processing. A conventional digital video signal recording or reproducing system is described in, for example, "Progress in High-Definition Television" by THE INSTITUTE OF ELECTRONICS, INFORMATION AND COMMUNICATION ENGINEERS. FIG. 1 is a block diagram of a conventional digital video signal recording or reproducing system. In this system, a digital video signal of the NTSC system is input to a sync separator 1. The digital video signal is separated into a luminance signal and two color signals, that is, a blue-color signal (B-Y) and a red-color signal (R-Y). The separated luminance signal is converted into an analog luminance signal by an analog-to-digital (A/D) converter 2 and is then recorded on a magnetic tape by a magnetic recording-and-reproducing device 3 such as a video tape recorder (VTR). The color signals, on the other hand, are converted into an analog color-difference signal (B-Y-R) and an analog luminance signal (Y) by a demodulator 4 and a contour signal generator 5. The analog color-difference signal (B-Y-R) is converted into a digital color-difference signal by an A/D converter 6, and the digital color-difference signal is converted into a digital video signal by a digital-to-analog (D/A) converter 7, and then recorded on the magnetic tape by the magnetic recording-and-reproducing device 3. In addition, the luminance signal (Y) is converted into a digital luminance signal by an A/D converter 8, and the digital luminance signal is converted into a digital video signal by a digital-to-analog (D/A) converter 9, and then recorded on the magnetic tape by the magnetic recording-and-reproducing device 3.
