Often we simply say one word to each other (and that's about it). To make things worse, we talk too loudly, and it's never good to pass by each other like that. Therefore, if I were to ask him about something, I would just say "buzzing about you". I don't think that "buzzing about you" is a nice way to refer to a person. However, is it correct to say that? Or is there a better word to use? A: Buzzing about someone can be complimentary. Describe the dynamic in which there is no contact between you and your colleagues; you hear them talking about you but you have no idea what they're talking about. - 0cc13bf012

Of the 88 hospitalizations reported last week, 23 were for children younger than five years, said Jessica L. Schott, spokeswoman for the Illinois Department of Public Health. Hospitalizations are expected to increase as the temperature climbs and widespread flu activity increases. “It is important to get your flu shot if you are not already immunized and for people who are immunocompromised to be sure they get one also,” Schott said. The vast majority of those who are hospitalized with flu symptoms do not have the flu, she said. Last year there were more than 8,000 hospitalizations in Illinois, the most since 2008. The 2012-2013 season has ranked as one of the worst in Illinois, as well as other Midwest states. Public health officials said that flu activity is expected to continue to be widespread across the country and there could be another active flu season early next year.<sup>1</sup>

1. Field of the Invention
The present invention relates to an antifuse structure and an antifuse array formed on a semiconductor substrate. More particularly, the present invention relates to an antifuse structure for forming a programmable array of antifuses in a substrate, or semiconductor wafer, and an antifuse array including a plurality of such antifuse structures.

2. Description of Related Art
Automation of manufacturing processes has created a need for greater flexibility of manufacturing process control. In the manufacture of semiconductor devices, a large number of device structures are formed on a semiconductor wafer. Although semiconductor manufacturers have developed automated equipment to improve the efficiency of wafer processing, flexibility in the manufacturing process is limited by the need to control each operation with precision and repeatability. As one aspect of this control, the manufacturers of semiconductor devices have developed a technique known as “fuse programming.” Antifuses are widely used in the semic
